New Look Scheduled For Cohasset's Finest

The Police Association has voted to change the uniform shirt color of officers to two-toned blue and navy. Selectmen unanimously approved the decision.

The change was sought when the Association took stock of the variety of shirts currently worn by the men in the department. Since there are no written specifications enforced, many of the officers look as though they are dressed in different uniforms.

Sgt. John Rhodes said that the Association would like to see the uniforms fully standardized, with the exception of revolvers, by July. A suggested list of items to be changed and eventually conformed to by all included: a switch from the regular nine-point hat to the round style worn by MDC police, black or navy blue socks, black police shoes or boots and the two-toned shirts bearing the same collar pins, flag and town patches.

Higher ranking officers may be allowed to wear a shirt of a different color. It was also agreed to maintain auxiliary officers grey and black shirts to distinguish them from regular patrolmen.

A discussion about standardizing police revolvers raised the possibility of acquiring stainless steel .38 caliber revolvers, which would require little maintenance. Selectman Mary Jeanette Mur said she will investigate the suggested changes in police accouterments.
